This study is aimed at evaluating surgical management of thymomas according to Masaoka's classification. Among our patients, 33 patients with thymoma underwent surgery with extended thymectomy. In Masaoka's classification, type C1 (with invasion to T, N or M), and type C2 (without invasion to T, N or M) were 14 and 19 cases, respectively. Postoperative radiotherapy was performed for type C1 (12 cases) and C2 (18 cases). In type C1, there was no recurrence until the latest follow-up period (mean 46 months). Only 1 patient of type C2 developed recurrence. There were no major surgical complications in this study. The surgical modalities of thymomas should be determined according to Masaoka's classification.module("z.resource.ServerUrlGet") test("returns the result of the http GET request", function() { var response = z.resource.ServerUrlGet("") assert.equal(response.code, 200) }) test("returns a default value if the result of

Although many patients achieve a long-term remission with standard treatments, a subset of patients has an indolent disease course but lacks prognostic factors and an effective treatment. Novel therapies with anti-CD20 monoclonal antibodies (mAbs), small-molecule kinase inhibitors, immunomodulatory agents, antibodies to the B-cell maturation antigen, and other agents are currently under investigation to improve outcome. The results of a variety of ongoing studies, such as of ipilimumab in combination with rituximab, of kinase inhibitor ibrutinib, and of the anti-B-cell mAb, ofatumumab, are consistent with improved outcomes in the treatment of CLL.The next time you find yourself at a dinner party or a function, you may want to wear a hair decoration. The one to watch out for is the “Ouch!” hair slide, which looks just 3e33713323
