A typical call center agent will generate and process hundreds of calls every day, with calls coming in from the same area, from the same agent, or from the same customer. With that in mind, most agents want to practice and improve their skills to ensure they use the best possible techniques with the best possible results. While some tools are available in the market (like HootSuite) to build a very smart call center, there is no such tool available in the cloud that is easy to use, easy to scale up, and easy to make incremental adjustments. The Polly is our easy to use, cloud-based platform, that makes it easy for anyone to create custom IVRs, to build custom agents, and to build custom reports. After calling, the agent needs to ask the customer to confirm that the information provided by the customer is accurate. In case of any discrepancy or missing information, the agent needs to take the correct information and get the customer to update the information. This process is referred to as Account Verification and is a critical step in every customer service interaction. The verification is necessary to avoid any potential fraud. The verification is essential for the following reasons: The Hindi language has slowly been gaining traction and the Patent Office should ensure that it is supported in every respect. As mentioned earlier, the PGC, a grievance-sheet-based mechanism, is one of the alternatives available for grievance redressal but it is known that the PGC is not an effective mechanism as the Government is not transparent about its functioning. The grievance procedure in this regard must be improved and made more effective, to ensure that it is in actuality available to the people.

It is with these issues in mind that India must enact a national policy of making its language as the language of business. While this is more of an aspiration than a reality, the government must ensure that the intent is upheld with adequate facilities to actualize this aspiration. Now that the IPR Review Board guidelines have been mandated, it is essential for the government to take a holistic view of their implications for patent filings and IPR. While details of the work involved in patent filing, and the language needed to conduct the same, are not within the purview of the IPR Review Board at this juncture, the substance of the Guidelines, namely the requirement for proficiency in English and the consultation guidelines upon which they were based, must now be made transparent for anyone to understand. Once made so, if it is not made mandatory for the Board to base its decisions on written briefs in English and the board itself to have English proficiency, the Guidelines can be made acceptable. This should also include well-equipped facilities for patent drafting and filing, given the fact that Indian nationals (first, second and third-country) make up almost 100% of the patentees in India. This should also include the enforcement of the Patents Rules to act as a barrier against patent agents, otherwise known as patent trolls, filing patents in their native language whose only objective is to seek money from businesses by using patents that are lacking in substance. Under the same broad premise, the Patents Rules must be updated to allow for such clauses to be excluded without adversely impacting Indian companies. 5ec8ef588b
