the efforts of india's youth are not limited to street theatre or the absence of a second language. they are also in the classroom, using the unending supply of videos and games available on the internet to provide a different perspective to their subjects. in fact, a recent survey found that 69% of india's youth are more aware of their culture after using the internet. an estimated 150,000 indian students are using the internet for learning purposes. in the past, to fight poverty, we used to give money. the government would give money to the poor. but, is that the only way to fight poverty? is it fair to say that poverty is not a social issue, but rather a personal issue? can we convince the poor that the wealth of india is in their own hands? the method of redistribution of wealth is a major reason for poverty. redistribution of wealth is the best way to fight poverty. if you give money to the poor, they will not work. they will not do anything. they will just consume the money. the poor are not interested in learning. they are not interested in jobs. they want to spend. if you give them money, they will not work. they will not help their families. that is not a solution. they need to be made to understand that they are important. they are important because they are the hope of the nation. they are the future of india. that is why we should give them money. they should be given money, not because they are poor, but because they are the hope of the nation. this is india, where the government spends rs 10,000 crore a year on school education and 50% of the population is below 25. only 11% of india's population is literate. india has 1.3 billion people, less than a third of the world's population, yet its economy is the world's fastest growing, powered by the talent and resourcefulness of its youth. the country's gdp grew at 7.6% last year, despite a

india is like a bottle that has been lying in the sun. it may still be full of water, but the bottom has caved in. many countries have collapsed in the same way. america, for instance, went from being one of the world's leading economies to a nation where you have to carry your own toilet paper. india will need to cut down on its reliance on the best universities of the world. india's universities, of course, have produced a large number of world-class thinkers, but they also produce a large number of people who can't even speak their own language.

this is the indian way of life - a nation of extremes. the extremes that some countries have come to know - poverty, war, revolution - india doesn't want any of that. india has no army, no police force, no prisons and no weapons. even its most destructive weapon - its billion-strong youth, educated beyond belief - is used to go about the country solving its problems peacefully. india is a country where the colours of your shirt - and the poor school you go to - are more important than the colour of your money. politicians want to do good, but they don't want to be corrupt. this country of 1.3 billion people has only 300,000 policemen. that's not a lot when you consider that there are 300,000,000 of us. we're also not a huge market, so there isn't much incentive to do good. india also needs to raise its literacy rates. only 60% of our people are literate. that's less than half the world's average of 90%. if we are to become a leading nation we will have to make good use of the educational system we have, and raise our literacy rates, to get more people educated. 5ec8ef588b
