the initial release of the monster hunter series was for the playstation 2 in 2002. [8] the series started with monster hunter g in japan, which was released in 2001 for the playstation 2, and in 2003, the game was localized to the west as monster hunter g: nightfall; it was the first monster hunter game released in the west. monster hunter portable 3rd was released on the nintendo ds in 2009 and was also localized to the west under the name monster hunter portable 3rd: the spine of the world. [14] it was the first monster hunter game to be released in the west to be released for a home console. [2] the game was localized under the name monster hunter portable 2nd and released for the nintendo 3ds in 2010. both games were critically and commercially successful, and the sequel monster hunter portable 3rd would go on to be the best selling game in the series. [15] the games spawned a series of sequels and spin-offs, and have sold a combined total of more than 13 million copies worldwide, [16] and the first game has been credited for pioneering the action role-playing genre. [17] the player character's name, gender, age and date of birth are in no way connected to the player character's hunter, though the game's first opening sequence states that the player character is born in a time when the protagonist is a child. many of the game's monsters are also of mythical origin, and often wear exotic attire or have masks and other adornments, leaving it unclear if the monsters are human or extra-terrestrial. monster hunter frontier g has a more western style of presentation than the original monster hunter, eschewing the japanese traditional cel-shaded graphics for a more realistic 3d art style. in addition, the music has been overhauled, with many tracks being replaced by new ones. the game's sound effects and battle cries are also new. it includes three new weapons: the shurikens, the twin-tusk spear, and the sharpened arrow.

example, a weapon with high physical attack will deal more damage, but one with higher defense will block more attacks. a more powerful weapon will have faster attack speed and more stamina consumption. sometimes, the hunter can find weapons and equipment that can only be equipped in specific quests. while the hunter is in the field, they are automatically followed by their felyne, who can only accompany one player at a time. the hunter can control the felyne's actions in combat through a system called the "follow hotkey" located in the right-hand corner of the screen. the follow hotkey provides a number of commands, including a quick auto-follow, a quick lock-on, a quick whistle command to call the felyne, a command to quickly run over the felyne, and a quick command to throw the felyne. by using the follow hotkey commands, the hunter can use the felyne as a mobile support unit, such as when the felyne can use their whirlpool blade to knock monsters off of cliffs, or simply as a
