There have been some rather compelling Adobe news items this week, and like most Adobe products (Airline Information System, Transmit, Agencywide, etc.) it is augmented by a new Unified Creative Suite. After a long wait, Photoshop is back on iOS. I hope it will receive the same attention the new Mac version has received. I am pretty much disappointed by the last version. Too many bugs and crashes. I hope the new iOS version is more stable. I heard a lot of good feedback about iPad Pro. So let's hope that Adobe's team has also collaborated with Apple to make it even more stable. The iPad Pro is ready. While many feature calls in Photoshop still seem like wishful thinking and are very much 'to be determined', it does seem that Apple has managed to actually implement a lot of new features that align with the iPad Pro. With the iPad Pro, every UI element can be resized to suit any shape, or even custom width/height. I mentioned above that iOS has a lot in common with the Mac app, such as the new Markup panel, the familiar Photoshop layout, and the large canvas. But the platform also has some very new features, including a new user interface for the History panel. And even the way you switch between filters, like holding finger on the Filter list display and swiping over to the other side of the display. Speaking of the History panel, HiDPI resolution is applied to each individual filter/layer. i.e. If you double the resolution of a filter, you double the number of pixels it - whatever number was previously displayed - is applied to each additional filter.

It may not always make sense to run Photoshop in Administrator mode. If you plan on running Photoshop for a significant amount of time or on a computer with limited resources, you might want to consider Startup mode. One of the easiest ways to manage your memory usage and maximise your computer resources while you're using Photoshop is to use the Memory Jet. You can set the Memory Jet to open areas of the memory when you launch Photoshop. It will then close the memory and unexpectedly return to that area of memory when you open Photoshop again. If you are working on a desktop computer you should use the Monitor settings in System Preferences to set the monitor mode to 'Synchronise Display'. This configures the computer so that Photoshop uses all the available screen real estate. You can then adjust the display settings in Photoshop to change the size of the active window.
